The International Open Data Conference (IODC) is an event that brings the global open data community together in order to learn, share, plan, and collaborate on the future of open data. The unique nature of this event is that it gathers together in one location a diverse range of participants from the northern and southern hemispheres to define strategies to advance open data both globally and locally.

IODC's agenda has been co-created by the community through an open call for proposals, resulting in a diverse programme of interactive sessions, workshops, and special events. In addition, during the week before IODC18, the Argentinian government and the civil society organizations will host a range of parallel activities and pre-events to complement the conference.

The Ministry of Modernization of the Government of Argentina and its IODC partners are committed to developing an inclusive and empowering event through gender balance, regional diversity, and free expression.

The IODC has 3 main objectives:

1

Identify and explore the new opportunities and challenges that are shaping the open data agenda.

2

Highlight innovative and practical open data solutions capable of driving social and economic impact in areas such as health, education, science, etc.

3

Consolidate an international partnership to drive the development of global common resources for the international open data community.

Purpose and Participation

The 2018 International Open Data Conference will bring together representatives from across the open data community to exchange experiences and best practices, create opportunities for innovative thinking and collaboration, and promote a dialogue on a range of critical issues, including:

- Experts and Open Data Users
- Civil Society
- Multilateral organizations
- Government Policymakers and Service Providers
- Private sector
- Researchers and Academics
- Data journalists
